SATURDAY MORNING, MARCH 26, 1859.

OLD TIME DUELS IN IRELAND. In an article on the Correspondence of Charles, first Marquis Cornwallis, in the last | umes, $1.75. London Quarterly, we find an interesting sketch of the Irish code of honor during the Administration of Cornwallis as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Reviewer, in speaking of one of the plans adopted by the Opposition to the Union (between England and Ireland,) which was the arbitrament of the pistol or sword, remarks that, the truth is, the scheme was in accordance with the manners of the period; and the Irish laws of duciling seemed framed for the express purpose of encouraging bullies and neutralising any incidental good which has been supposed to result from the practice.—

Any anxiety for an explanation or accommodation on the part of either seconds or principals was thought to betray a lack of courage. Challenges were given or provoked by way of mere bravado; and what would now be considered the most indefensible irregularities, were permitted on the ground.

In the duel between Lord Clare, then Attorney-General, and Curran, the parties were left to fire when they chose. "I never," said Curran, "saw any one whose determination seemed more malignant than Fitzgibbon's. D. D., $1. After I had fired, he took aim at me for at least half a minute; and on its proving ineffectual, I could not help exclaiming to him, "It was not your fault, Mr. Attorney-you were deliberate enough." In the duel between Corry and Grattan, Corry was wounded at the first fire, yet they went on covering each with their second pistols, each wishing to reserve his fire, until it was arranged that both should fire at a signal, which they did and missed.

The duel between Alcock and Coldelough, which took place in the presence of several hundred freeholders and eight or ten county magistrates, was preceded by a discussion whether, one of the combatants being nearsighted, neither should wear spectacles or "Without my glaesses!" exclaimed the near-sighted combatant, "I could not see to shoot a man at twelve paces, if it was my own

Martain tried the temper of George Robert Fitzgerald's concealed armour by discharging two holster pistols point blank against his ribs. Notwithstanding the repeated detection and exposure of this notorious bully's cowardly and treacherous mode of fighting. he retained a footing in society till he was hanged. The climax of unreason was reached in Curran's affair with Major Hobart, then Secretary for Ireland Curran, having been affronted by a man named Gifford, declared "he would rather do without fighting all his life than fight such a fellow:" but as Gifford was a revenue officer, maintained that Major Hobart should dismiss him for his impertinence, or fight in his place. The Secretary demurred, and on Curran's insisting referred the question to Lord Carhampton the commander-in-chief, who decided it thus: "A secretary of state fighting for an exciseman would e rather a had precedent, but a major in the King's service is pugnacious by profession, and must fight anybody that asks him."— They exchanged shots without harm to either. In one remarkable instance, Lord Carhampton, the Colonel Luttrell of Middlesex celebrity, did not abide by his maxim; for he refused to fight his father, not because he was his father, but because he was not a gentle-

Station, however grave, was not claimed or accepted as a bar. The Provost of the College, Hutchinson, fought Doyle, a Master in lege, Hutchinson, tought Loyke a bis advice Chencery, and when a pupil asked his advice about a course of legal study, replied, "Buy The Lady Albarone, or the Poison Goblet, by The Lady Albarone, or the Poison Goblet, by and they will get you on faster than Fearne or Blackstone." Toler (Lord Norbury) followed this method so successfully that he was said to have shot up into preferment. A cu- Nation, for sale at French's, rious specimen of language has been preserved, along with many other curious traits of don Punch, Harper's Weekly, N. Y. Weekly, Mertrish manners, by Mr. Charles Phillips:—

"Hod J (mid Tolar) heard a man out of doors

"Hod J (mid Tolar) heard a man out of doors "Had I (said Toler) heard a man out of doors using such language as that by which the honorable member (George Ponsonby) has violated the decorum of Parliament, I would have seized the ruffian by the throat and draged him to the ground."

The only gleam of good sense in their code of honor, was the common understanding that | miums, selected by the best judges, and warranted no affront was implied in a joke .- Southern in every respect, making a large and elegant stock,

PARIS FASHIONS.

Paris letters state that the capital was never gayer nor the whirl of Parisian fashion more eager than at present. Balls and entertainments of every description throng and jostle each other, striving which shall offer most attractions to the invited guest. In most cases costumes and fancy dresses are de riqueur. Madame De Morny having in-sisted on the costume of Louis XV., was in despair to find that the male sex threatened to desert her saloons in a body. The dress demanded the sacrifice of whiskers; and this was a severe trial even for the gallantry of Frenchmen, to say nothing of Englishmen and Americans. Fashion, however, and cunning, carried the day, and the gentlemen are compelled to exhibit themselves in smooth faces and powdered wigs.
